China hopes that Brexit is “orderly”

China wants to see an “orderly” Brexit, according to a paper issued by the country’s Foreign Ministry.

“China hopes to see Brexit proceed in an orderly fashion and stands ready to advance China-EU and China-UK relations in parallel,” said the paper.

The paper is published as Theresa May is set to meet with her cabinet reportedly to discuss further planning in the event of a no-deal Brexit. This comes after Number 10 sources accused Labour Leader Jeremy Corbyn of staging a political stunt, with his threats of a no confidence motion in the Prime Minister.

The Labour leader’s no-confidence motion will not be granted parliamentary time for debate. However, Mrs May won support in Parliament, with her Brexiteer MPs and DUP members saying they would have backed her.

The EU is China’s largest trading partner while China is its biggest trading partner after the United States.

China has previously said that they will actively explore the possibility of securing a “top-notch free trade agreement” once the UK leaves the EU

At the time, Chinese Commerce Minister Zhong Shan has said that the two countries have discussed how to boost investment and expand trade in services.

Chancellor Philip Hammond said that talks were started during a visit to China in June. “As a firm supporter of trade liberalisation and a free market, the United Kingdom is China’s long-term trusted partner.”

International Trade Secretary Liam Fox has said that Britain aims to increase its exports to 35% of GDP after leaving the EU by increasing trade ties with other world trade members.

Formal talks cannot begin until the UK officially leaves the EU, but with just over 100 days until the UK leaves the EU could the hope of a trade deal with China help negotiations?
